

Fundamental Facts about the Universe We Live In

Below are some fundamental facts, actually “operating laws” of our individual and collective life experience in this universe. We hope that they cause you to think and question.

We actually do create our own reality. Nothing happens to us by chance, accident or coincidence. Everything that we experience is agreed to on some level of our being.

This is a free will universe. That means that any being in it has the right to do whatever he/she/it wants to.

There is a system of cause and effect built into the construct of our universe, though. There is such a thing as karma. The popular viewpoint of “There is no such thing as karma” is not accurate. The concept of karma is vastly misunderstood, however. It is accurate to say that “there is no free lunch.” We all must take responsibility for what we create.

We create our reality by the following little formula:

Thought + emotion (desire or resistance) = what we manifest in our experience

Thought is the idea or concept or mental image. It is not strictly accurate to say that “thoughts are things.”

The thought is not likely to come into manifestation without emotion behind it. Emotion (desire or resistance) is the propellant.

The law of attraction, or “like attracts like” does apply in this universe. Each of us will seek our vibrational match.

Although we do have full free will to create, it is not strictly accurate to say that we can manifest everything we could possibly desire by using techniques of conscious creation. There is fine print, especially for the truly spiritually inclined.
