

What's in a Name?

By Reniyah Wolf

Messenger for the Archangel Metatron

From the New Testament of the Holy Bible, New International Version, Book of John, Chapter 1, verse 1:

In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God.

Creation, as we know it and experience it, exists on the waves of sound vibration – in other words “Words.” The Word” as above, is the sound vibration which forms light and sustains and permeates the reality we experience together. Each part of creation, from the incomprehensibly small subatomic particle to the incredibly vast universe has a Name, a defining wavelength and energetic resonance which differentiates it from all other parts of Creation. A “wavelength” defines and gives form to an image in the Mind of God. The “Word” is the vehicle to which gives a thoughtform a tangible, experiential reality, separating that one thoughtform from the realm of the unmanifest and bringing it into its own unique manifestation. We, as part of God, also have the ability to use the Word, A “name,” such as the “names” we identify ourselves with, or give to other parts of the greater creation with which we co-exist, defines a particular thoughtform’s wavelength by collective agreement. For instance, when I write or say the word “giraffe,” a consistent picture of a certain animal will come to mind. When I write or say the word “demon”, another consistent picture will come to mind, according to the thoughtforms that humans have attached to the word “demon” over the passage of time and generations.

We are also well aware of how our names, given at birth and sometimes changed by marriage or personal choice, can affect our state of mind and emotions, as well as our social interactions. Children who are given very uncommon names often suffer in life. Children who are “called names” throughout childhood grow up to identify themselves with those derogatory names. Often our given names define us in ways we don’t really care to be defined and attach us to thoughtforms we would rather not be attached to. On the other hand, familial names which are passed down through the generations can be a source of pride. When a family name is passed down through subsequent generations, the younger recipients of that name take on the wavelength of the ancestors who also bore it. Whether or not a woman chooses to take the name of her husband upon marriage, combine his name with hers, or to keep her maiden name, will also be an act of self-definition. People may take, or are given spiritual names upon entering into a specific order or practice. The taking of a spiritual name also changes our wavelength. It says to the cosmos “We are not the same as we were before.” In some initiatory orders, one is required to change his/her name upon reaching a certain level. This is symbolic of the complete dissolution of the ego and essentially being “born anew.” When we change our names, we change our wavelength, our identifier in the general scheme of creation, our “cosmic barcode”.

But what about the “Word” that is God? What about the incomprehensibly intricate system of Names that defines our universe and holds each component, microscopic and macroscopic, in place? What about the Sacred Names that define Divine thoughtforms and templates and are our connection with our own Divine aspects? We humans have never been left alone completely to our own devices as we have walked in the darkness of duality. The Sacred Names, representing the highest aspects of Divinity, have been given to every generation of humanity by Divine Messengers, throughout history, throughout the world, contained in the written and spoken words of the sacred languages. The archetypal qualities/energies of the aspects of the Divine Mother and the Divine Father are activated as humans invoke the Sacred Names of God and Goddess, or of the vast angelic energies which support and sustain the very existence of our universe. The practice of speaking, chanting, singing or writing the Sacred Names goes back to time immemorial and every culture that has existed. These Sacred Names, in various languages and cultures, invoke the Divine thoughtforms of the aspects of God-Goddess which they represent.

You, the reader, may have adopted a spiritual name containing the Sacred Name of an aspect of God or Goddess that you wish to call forth within yourself – such as Isis, Quan Yin, Ganesh, Thoth, etc. The Sacred Names, whether they are contained within the five sacred languages, or imbued with power because of use by many generations of the faithful, contain great power. Incidentally, archetypes from the other end of the spectrum, demons, fallen angels and such are also invoked by their names. Someone who chose to be identified by “Satan” or “Beelzebub,” for instance would invoke thoughtforms and energies attached to those names. In the practice of magic, it is possible to create an actual elemental entity to do one’s bidding from a thoughtform by “naming” it and then invoking it. This is not a practice I would recommend. Groups of people, unbeknownst to themselves, also create elemental entities by focusing their thoughts and emotions of fear into a name. “Satan” is one such prominent example of this – he is a very real elemental being created and sustained for millennia by those who have feared him. Elemental beings created in such a manner really have no home in heaven or earth, and will control and terrorize humans who are ignorant of their real nature.

Do you think it is likely that the highest aspects of Divinity, be they God, Goddess, ascended masters or angelic forces whom we have called upon throughout countless generations, whose Sacred Names are written in our hearts, in our sacred languages and in our morphogenetic grids are suddenly going to change their names or add to them? What do you think would happen if they did that? What if Mother Mary appeared to thousands of Catholics and said “My name is no longer Mary, but Suzi-Q.”? How do you think they would feel saying “Hail Suzi-Q, the Lord is with Thee, blessed art Thou among women.”? It loses something, doesn’t it? How about Archangel Michael? What if he all of a sudden said “Ok folks, my name is now Archangel Harry? When you then call forth the energies of Archangel Harry to protect you and empower you, how does that feel? Can you envision Archangel Harry holding the Flaming Sword of Truth?

What happens when you invoke the energies of a “new name” for a timeless, eternal being? You are effectively cut off from accessing that being’s energies. The “new name” isn’t in the programming for this present reality. You are, then, actively contributing to the co-creation of a new, corrupt thoughtform or invoking and strengthening the energies of unknown beings that you may really not actually want to invoke. It’s a very clever plan, getting a lot of people to invoke unknown and dubious entities into the Earth plane because essentially they will believe anything they are told. Does anybody know where these new names actually come from and what energies they invoke? Does anyone ask why the higher beings are not themselves, through their own chosen, undeniably pure channels, announcing their own name changes and additions if such would actually be the case?

The greater Divine Aspects of God-Goddess which hold our universe in form and continuity are not likely to change the Names we know them by. These are the Names they themselves have given us, in all our languages, coded into our grids. When the name changes, the wavelength and signature resonances also change. In the case of these great cosmic beings, that would mean that our whole reality, the history, evolution and culture of the human race and planet Earth would radically change, or perhaps even cease to exist. This occurrence is not possible within the cosmic laws of physics. Beware of false prophets who tell you that vast angelic beings or ascended masters have changed their names, or added to their names. An addition to the name of a higher being will also alter the signature resonance so that the same energies are not being invoked. You may get into more than you bargained for, as not all invoked energies/entities have your best interest in mind.
